Q: Apache's LogFormat not formatting lines with DOS-type text (CR/LF/TAB) I've got a server running an Apache instance that looks something like this: /srv/www/vhost.example.com/public_html/ - this is where the public root is /srv/www/vhost.example.com/private_html/ - the site's admin area The problem is that some of the lines in the Apache logs have some DOS-style (CR/LF/TAB) text that isn't handled by Apache's LogFormat. For example, if I do this: tail -f /tmp/apache.log | grep "File not found" I will get this line in the logs: \r \t\t\tFile not found\r \t\t\tIn /srv/www/vhost.example.com/private_html/ Is there any way around this? A: The grep command is interpreting \r as a newline, while the LogFormat is reading it as part of an actual new line: \r is the DOS-style newline. Notepad++ can be set to ignore tabs, but I don't know if there's a way to do that across all programs.
