PostÂ .1. Field of the Invention The invention relates generally to a device that improves the operation of a vehicle heating, ventilation and air conditioning system. More specifically, the invention relates to a device that senses the presence of moisture or ice on the windshield or other exterior surface of the vehicle. 2. Related Art Automobiles typically include a heating and ventilation system with an inlet and an outlet. The inlet is located near the top of the vehicle while the outlet is located near the bottom of the vehicle. The system will cause air to flow from the inlet to the outlet such that the air is circulated around the vehicle, thus heating and/or cooling the interior of the vehicle. Most heating and ventilation systems include a windshield washer sprayer for cleaning the windshield. If the windshield is blocked with a residue of water or ice, the washer sprayer will either fail to function properly or operate excessively, thereby wasting water and wasting time. Existing devices for detecting moisture or ice on the windshield employ infrared sensing systems. An example of such a system is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,844,698 to Yee. Yee discloses a method and apparatus for detecting the presence of moisture on the surface of an object. An infrared source generates a beam of infrared energy and directs the beam toward the surface of the object. A detector senses the beam of infrared energy and generates an electrical signal indicative of the intensity of the beam. The intensity of the beam decreases with the amount of moisture on the surface. However, it is an object of the invention to provide an improved device for detecting the presence of moisture or ice
