Multipad is a free tool that displays a multi-tabbed window with multiple concurrent web browsers. You can open and switch between the tabs at any time. You can choose whether to display tabular or graphical views. You can customize the web browser's properties by modifying the web browser tab colors, the web browser tab font and the web browser's toolbar. In addition, it offers the option of displaying as web links the tabs' contents as well as the current web browser's URL in the tab, without having to switch the tab. Furthermore, you can insert a search string into the addresses you use to open a site (the way you can do with the Tabs Bar for Firefox), which will come handy when searching on the internet or when you have to explore the contents of several pages. Designers are free to change as many settings of the tool as they like, and the modifications apply for all the opened tabs. The difference is that when you change a property of one specific tab, this change is applied to all the other tabs.
