Salam DuSufoisQ: ReactJS - Javascript interface to communicate with server (WebSocket) I'm trying to develop a product which consists of an interface, a server and a client. The server and client use Node.js. The server listens on a given port and starts processing incoming HTTP requests. The client connects and sends requests to the server. The idea is that the interface is a thin javascript layer which communicates to the server. I'm not sure how to go about this. I want to be able to use the javascript language (React JS) on the client side to send and receive messages, but can't figure out how to achieve this. This would require a Javascript interface, but I don't want to reinvent the wheel. Is there a library which can facilitate the communication? Thanks in advance! A: WebSockets don't require you to implement your own protocol. You only need to implement a TCP socket connection that you can use with the Socket.IO library. Socket.IO is designed to be simple and easy to use. It has an official chrome app, so it's not hard to use. Q: SDL fails with dynamic loading when building for android I've recently started building a simple android application which uses SDL library (using SDLActivity from their repository). I've successfully compiled the same application for Windows and it runs fine. But, when I try to build for Android, I get the following
