VNC is not only a remote desktop service, but it can also be used to save time and effort when transferring a number of files from one computer to another. How To Use VNC to Transfer Files Easily First of all, users should know that VNC is a software and file transfer system that provides a way for users to share desktop sessions over the Internet. The program can be used to help you save time and effort while moving files between a certain computer and a network computer. VNC is capable of transferring both terminal and graphical based sessions. The latter being the scenario we are dealing with in this case. The process is simple. All you need to do is download and install the program on the remote computer, while you can simply run the executable files on your local computer. Once the program is installed, you should now be able to share both terminal and graphical based sessions. Note, however, that if you are operating on Windows 7, the VNC service should be enabled on your remote computer. However, the program should be placed in your list of regular programs. You might find it difficult to connect with the remote computer. If this is indeed the case, make sure that you follow the prompts to enter the IP address of the other computer. Keep in mind that the IP address should be entered in a domain format. VNC Viewer is a great tool for troubleshooting when you encounter errors regarding your internet connection. VNC is a software that allows you to share your desktop over the Internet, but it is not a remote desktop software. For those who want to save time and effort while transferring files between multiple computers, the VNC software is the best tool you can find.
