Thanks for your comments. I feel like I have been brainwashed or something. The Mater is basically a clean, sleek, down-to-earth design that is not as out there as the RX-3. It suits me better. I feel like the the RX-3 is so over-designed that it's impractical, heavy, and unwieldy. The Mater suits my needs perfectly. Yea, I think the DA is great but I prefer the Mater. I have a DA and the TM is a perfect fit for me. I got mine for $250 at a car dealer 3 months ago in an awkward stage of my ownership. I would have really liked to wait a couple months, but I didn't want to sit on it anymore. What We're Saying: David Bowie had the talent and the ambition to be a true storyteller and he did that stunningly for decades. The problem was, he didn't give a sh*t what people thought. It's easy to see where he went wrong with his memoir. In the age of omnipresent social media he gets to keep much of the story to himself, leaving us forever hungry for more, never content with what we have. The "backstage" diary. To describe what Bowie saw, felt, and heard is one thing, to speculate about it and create a narrative of it is another. Bowie's letters to "soul sisters". Some of the letters are painfully misogynist. And then there are the missives to his gay friends where he's just so intolerant. The awful scribbles. And that bleeding ear. Well, that's always appealing. The two-tone image. The incoherent memoir. Bowie writes as if he's confiding in a long lost friend, which can only make you feel a little sad. But a lot relieved that someone is still there with you f30f4ceada
