Like in the past few years, Google has continued to follow the trend of reducing the number of parameters the main search engine, only this time with the target of making it more accessible. The new update consists of reducing the parameters in the search bar to 13. These changes will not affect the user in any way and will be more intuitive and convenient. Furthermore, the parameters available in the sidebar menu have also been simplified. Below we will show you what to expect from them, be aware that all the changes are still pending approval by Google. It is not a long way until we start to see the results of these changes, since their implementations will be gradually applied from May 11. You do not have to worry about poor performance of the service as the company will continue to provide technical support. Although we do not know yet, the number of parameters eliminated from the search box may increase. More than 20 parameters have been eliminated from the search. Each time you find yourself in a situation where you have to check the parameters for a particular website, especially after completing a new article or a blog post, you can check the URL of the page that contains the search box, highlighting and changing one by one the parameters from the search box. The side navigation is also simplified. There is only one available module, located in the lower right corner of the menu. Here you will find a quick menu where you can access the five most important links for your webpage. In the previous implementation, the side menu included 25 links. You can see the same list of links in the right column and the links inside a panel for each module. The next change affects the panel of the navigation, where the order of the modules has changed. Previously the modules appeared in a horizontal list, the next algorithm will have them appear in a vertical list. The sidebar menu is the one that has caused the most confusion and has generated debates in the last few months. Therefore, we do not know how the module will change its appearance, the program only says that the new algorithm will be more intuitive and make it easier to select the module. This change will probably affect more than 1 million websites. On the one hand, the change will be more convenient for users, since there will be fewer parameters to check, while on the other, it will become more complicated and more challenging to find the module that may be of interest. The company that provides the SEO service will continue to provide support to those who have not
