Tokyo Expose is a desktop program that expands the screen real estate by displaying thumbnail images of all current open windows in an overlapping fashion. Features: * Thumbnail images use less system resources to work. * When a thumbnail image is placed on top of another image, the next pop-up window will not open unless you click it. * Thumbnail images update in real time, so you can see at a glance which programs are open. * Using the Show Desktop View option, you can easily find a window containing a document you are interested in. Requirements: * Start menu button in the windows explorer. * Windows Vista Home Premium or Professional. * Internet Explorer 8 (or newer). * All your favorite browser. To get an idea how it works, play with the Zoom size and the Opacity. These two values determine the size and the transparency of the thumbnail image.  Notice that you'll need to leave the mouse pointer over the thumbnail window to see which window is open. Only the open windows will light up as long as the mouse pointer is over them.  If the mouse pointer leaves a window, it will quickly fade out (default setting). If you change this setting to "Always On", the thumbnail image stays up for as long as you hold the mouse button down on a particular thumbnail image.  If you configure windows to not hide after a few seconds, they will stay opened forever if you let the mouse pointer hover over them.  If you move your mouse pointer over the desktop window, all of the open windows will immediately fade out. This is another setting that can be customized.  As far as a more demanding user is concerned, you can control all of these settings directly from the Settings window. You can configure the application the following: * the zoom width and height (in pixels) * the mouse pointer type and color * the minimum opacity and cursor color (you can always change it back) * the minimum width and height for a thumbnail image * whether to activate the tool tip function * the time to auto-hide and fade out windows As an example of what you can do with the Zoom setting, simply change it to 42 (or less). Then activate the thumbnail image in the TOP-RIGHT corner of the desktop window. Watch as it expands the desktop to the whole screen, covering the windows you had open earlier and showing you a thumbnail image for each open window. -- Examples of 09e8f5149f
