Q: Which is the final approach to finding the optimum gamma values for the multivariate gaussian distribution? I am trying to find the optimum gamma values for the multivariate Gaussian distribution. I found this article. As mentioned in the article, other approaches such as the marginal maximum likelihood estimation, are not considered a good measure because it suffers from numerical instability and extreme large-scale data. The PDF of the multivariate gaussian is as follows: I can write a brute-force function that generates the gamma values and iterates until the desired precision. But I would like to know the final approach to this problem.

A: You can use the Minimum Deviation Algorithm, which only requires
