Q: Guidelines for using a POST form with AJAX in PHP I'm trying to create a web form that uses ajax to run a php script and get the data back. My problem is that I want to pass along lots of data to the php script. As such, I am using POST. I'm using: ... I want the data to be part of the form and not just pass data through and get PHP to pick it up and combine it. Basically, how do I get the POST data from the form and use it in my ajax call? A: ... When your submit button is clicked, submit the form as it normally would. For example: $('form').submit(); That sets the form, when it's submitted, as an XMLHttpRequest object (usually referred to as XMLHttpRequest). XMLHttpRequest is a high-level interface to get/post data asynchronously. Now you have a request object (XMLHttpRequest) that you can use to do something with. In this example, here's a request that looks for some data in PHP: var request = new XMLHttpRequest(); request.open('POST', '/test.php', true); request.send(/* data
