Suppose I have a windows program. In the last few days, the users have started noticing a sluggish UI. They have different nag screens, green arrows (in target frame), etc. Which means I have to spend a lot of time with them to explain how to use the app, since there are a lot of options on the GUI. So, instead of having to explain to them, I just launch the app and then I go to the "About" tab, and select "Help" -> "About". Or, I could always use "Readme", but I still have to go there, to find out how to get there in the first place. Is there a way to do this without forcing them to go to the "About" tab in the first place? I could rely on my app being installed on the user's computer for the nag screen and some other things, but that's not always the case (especially when people don't install my app for some time). Edit: Most people think that this issue is not about windows, but about some anti-virus system, or Windows Update, etc. So I want to clarify that this is an issue related to the app I'm developing, and not the user's computer. I know that most anti-virus systems will at least slow down your app, but they will not even affect the way the About tab looks, or the way it works. And for Windows Update, a lot of people will never notice the red X, or the notification pop up when they get it. Therefore I don't want to have those notifications, since they will not help the issue at all. A: If you cannot programmatically wait for when a program starts (there are many ways to do this, and the easiest probably is to listen for the app to start in the shell), then I suggest you

Small size and simple interface. Registration: Give Sound Timer Product Key a try and enjoy all its features! Have fun! A: I like Reminder Pro for its simplicity and security (spam prevention). It also has a few other nice features, including: date & time convert to days/minutes/hours can schedule when to remind you can set reminders every minute, every hour, etc. there's an option to include a sound alert (though this might cause problems with some malware protection) Radial-velocity survey of the HD 6070 system. The radial-velocity survey of the HD 6070 system, performed with the CORALIE spectrograph at the Euler Swiss Telescope (ESO), yielded the discovery of a first-order planetary companion in a 3:4 mean-motion resonance with the distant parent star. The survey covered 600 binary stars. We found eight systems harboring a planet candidate, in all cases in 3:4 resonance. One of them (HD 4306) was identified as a planet host for the first time by a radial-velocity survey. One star (HD 5032) harbors two planets in 2:3 resonance. One (HD 4406) and two stars (HD 3576 and HD 3826) harbor one planet each in 3:2 resonance. The period ratio values in the 3:2 configuration are all consistent with a planetary origin of the mass-period correlation found by Hartman et al. (2008) for solar-type stars. A search for additional planet candidates in the HD 6070 system did not reveal any more planets.Q: OS X: How can I keep my frame rate constant when doing webcam recording? I'm using the current video4linux driver to record video, and I'm using the builtin Open GL Acceleration on my mac. My goal is to record a video of as constant a frame rate as possible. I'm not an expert, but I've looked into a number of solutions: FFmpeg. This hasn't worked so far, although I suspect it may work. Fluent API. This has worked, but has problems in the case 09e8f5149f
