(all images of download : pirated and illegal) A: Admittedly I haven't tried this myself but the (good) folks over at The Register think that Google's Spooky Panda bot may have come across your site in the past and will likely see it again in the future. The search engine, which currently indexes billions of pages each day, may also have to adjust its ranking algorithms to account for sites that masquerade as legitimate, according to Matt Cutts, Google's head of web spam. Google's Panda algorithm, which started rolling out last month, helps to weed out "hijacked" websites by dethroning pages which engage in Internet fraud and mass spam. Another reason for a potential reputation ding is that your sitemap.xml is getting a lot of views. My guess is that, for some reason, the search engines are not able to crawl the pages you want to index. You could upload them one by one manually using the HTTP protocol. If that's not feasible, try adjusting these settings in Robots.txt: User-agent: * Disallow: / If that doesn't work, have a look at this (reputed) article: A: W3C Validator doesn't like your HTML, it's returning errors for every page except for index.html. It states: Line 15, Column 10: HTML is not well-formed. ^~ end tag seen, but not closed. You missed. Line 15, Column 10: Element a is missing one of the following: a child end tag and ^~ end tag seen, but not closed. Line 21, Column 1: Element a is missing one of the following: end tag for the element's start tag, end tag for another element, a commented-out start tag for another element in the document, a flagged element in a document, a DVD hidden control for the element's start tag, a ^~ end tag seen, but not closed. You missed. Line 30, Column 1: Element a is missing one of the following: end tag for the element's start tag, 3da54e8ca3
