A disaster recovery (DR) solution that supports data protection for the hyper-converged infrastructure (HCI) from failing storage to off-site replication is needed. The companies and organizations that use the hyper-converged infrastructures as a service and as a strategy. These solutions include software-defined storage that does not require specific infrastructure and storage management (SMS). HCI is capable of providing high-level storage resources, creating one large virtual storage device for multiple workloads, and minimizing the cost of downtime by ensuring failover to an onsite or offsite redundant unit. When the server and network fail in an HCI system, the DR solutions can restore system data to the same or different systems. Depending on the DR solution, replication can be faster than a SAN, and it may even be designed for file level replication, RAID mirroring or full system replication. HCI and DR solutions provide data protection without having to manually replicate data to a separate site. The DR solution can replicate data from a remote site to a local site. The DR solution that supports data protection for the HCI will provide instant, low-latency access, better performance, and streamlined management. HCI solutions can be hyper-converged solutions, hyper-converged storage systems, and hyper-converged storage array. For any network topology or failure scenario, there is
