Most of us are probably well-versed in the basic tools and features of Craigslist. If you're a frequent shopper on the classifieds site, you probably use some of its features on a regular basis. However, there are some tools that we may not be aware of or use frequently. With this video, we will go through some of these hidden features of Craigslist. First up, we're going to look at the new option for posting pictures in your ad. Users can now add images into their posts. Usually, just uploading one picture takes a good amount of time. Here, you can pick the type of photo that you want to add. You can choose from 2 categories: Profile Photos and Pictures. If you have an image that you would like to put in your post, you can share it here and then pick your photo out. For the best results, make sure that the image you're posting in a good quality and clear. It's usually best to post an image that is within 1320x1320 pixels. This resolution is large enough to keep your text legible and readable. Next, we will go over the date filter option. Here you can pick out the exact date you are posting on. You can even save a post's title, description, tags and date so that you can resume where you left off the next time you visit the classifieds site. In the search filters, you can now choose your gender and relationship. You can also make some extra search filters so that you can be more specific to your search. This can include price, location, status and even contact number. The user interface is also getting a facelift. Craigslist is adding on a new layout. There's a new live preview feature and a feature to highlight your main message in black while the content is hidden in grey. There are also collapsable sections in your post. And we're done with the first feature but we are just getting started. In this video, we will go over several new options that are available on Craigslist's new interface. You'll notice that there
