These episodes were subtitled "remix," as they are significantly different from what was originally shown on TV. Some are comics adaptations, others are recut for younger audiences, and all of them are different. Most importantly, they are designed more as an idea generator, since they have an ending to serve as a call-back to the original series. For this, the interstitial moments that had been added to the animated TV episodes were removed. A particularly striking example of this is "Turtles on Ice," in which Leo cannot be bothered to get a date and instead goes to work on his motorcycle. In the original episode, once he splits the radiator (again) and fixes the bug trap, he spends the rest of the episode looking for a date - see "Turtles on Ice" for a storyboard breakdown (promo above). "Reflections," another episode that was altered for sequels, is essentially the final moment of "Transformers: The Movie." The first two of these remixes feature the
