Expression of recombinant proteins in cell cultures, especially those that over-express endogenous proteins (e.g., alkaline phosphatase), can raise technical difficulties due to complex formation between protein and protein-associated elements. What's new:

Discovered When carpenter Charles Butler systematically poisoned the water in Franklin, Maine, 18 years ago, he did not imagine his poisons and innuendos would destroy the careers of two career women, distract Congress's man on the Middle East, damage his father's career, and poison Ronald Reagan's ties to the Soviet Union. No, he merely wanted to build a successful business, annoy his neighbors, give high school girls the shivers, and impress his wife. Butler, who got the idea for the poisons from a heady reading of "The Lure of the Mongols," blames Walter Morrow, the man on the Mideast, for coercing Congress into stalling completion of his boondoggle, "Tree Top Farms," a forestry dream that would have scoured greenhouse gases from the Maine sky. But there's more to Butler than a puckish malice and a scant dry humor. He is a former medical lab technician who, in his mental condition, came to regard himself as a freakish one-woman poison lab. After Butler poisoned the water, his corporation, "Kurt Butler Architecture and Development, Inc.," took up the guerrilla campaign against his neighbors, "The Carters". Jane and John Carter are expert "environmentalists" with neither credentials nor the experience to legitimately challenge Butler's preposterous claims that he should be compensated for environmental damage nobody else thinks exists. The University of Maine School of Law and the State of Maine got more mileage out of Butler's forced eviction of the Carters than did the Butler victims, and, in the ensuing years, received considerable large-scale federal, state, and local funding for study of the gravestone terraces that Four Seasons golf trips had eroded. Butler, under the scientists' tutelage, has memorized the public-school literature. As a boy he "got an A" in public health, while the word poison infested his brain. " The Bartlett's. The Myers-Briggs. The Standard Six Navigator. Vernakal. Varibac, Vanath, Nytaz, Golobal. Triple-Delta. The Complete Anti-Apathy Kit. The Mastermind and Japonica with Navigator." Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a system for signaling, and more particularly, to a system for signaling based on imaged light in a vehicle. 2. Description of the Related Art A vehicle is a transportation means and a work machine that is operated by a driver and is thus an important element in traffic. A vehicle is equipped with an alarm system for monitoring a driver or with an apparatus that secures the safety of the driver. However, an anti-collision alarm system that is mounted inside the vehicle is not usually used to signal to other vehicles. Thus, the problem of reducing the overall traffic accident rate is not sufficiently addressed. It has been demonstrated that if pedestrians, drivers, and the like can have a positive interaction in traffic, the overall traffic accident rate can be reduced. However, as traffic has become more complex due to the use of automobiles, accidents have also become more complex. For example, as two automobiles pass a crosswalk, it is quite difficult to predict the reactions of one automobile to the actions of the other automobile, and a collision inevitably occurs. However, when both automobiles are assisted by an alarm system, even though each automobile's alarm system may react improperly, there is a high probability that a collision can be avoided because of the presence of both alarm systems. However, as far as is known, a system that indicates to pedestrians, drivers, and the like, whether they should respond positively to one other, is lacking. A vehicle alarm
