Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders has been hearing from groups from around the country—even Mexico—that would not allow illegal immigrants to become citizens but that would let them become legal residents. Though he does not support giving such people citizenship, Sanders says he would give them something valuable—a guest worker program. “I have no problem at all in my state, even with 10 million people there, there’s not enough jobs,” Sanders said in an interview with the Concord Monitor for the newspaper’s “VTDigger” series, which looks at state politics. “I would absolutely end [the practice] of deporting people. I would make it clear that they’re going to be allowed to remain here and work for a period of time, but they’re going to have to leave the country,” he said, adding that he would also require employers to offer them jobs. This, he said, could be done “while still protecting the jobs of the people of this country.” Sanders has been saying for some time that the immigration system in the U.S. “must be changed.” He has said that he would welcome an influx of guest workers from Mexico, but that undocumented immigrants should not be given the right to vote. “They need to learn about our political process before they vote on it,” he told the Monitor. “What I would suggest is a guest-worker program so that people in Mexico and other countries can come here and learn about our system and when they are ready to vote they can vote.” Trump has suggested that he would scrap a proposed pathway to citizenship for illegal immigrants, a measure that Sanders supported in the past. Although he did say, in April, that the issue could be revisited in the future. “I would certainly look at that,” Sanders said. “That is a decision for others to make.” He did not elaborate, saying, “I don’t know what it is,” when asked if he would even consider supporting a pathway to citizenship for those who are in the U.S. illegally./* SPDX-License-Identifier: GPL-2.0 */ #ifndef
