In FIFA 19, a new position, “midfield general,” was introduced as the classic No. 10 role was adjusted to be more potent in the attacking phase. Similar to the new No. 8 role in FIFA 20 and FIFA 21, this new position can change lanes and pass through the defense in the final third to set up teammates for scoring opportunities. This position was intended to be an ideal fit for more technical and dynamic players and versatile players who like to play on the wing. After achieving a number of victories in the grass-roots football community, the final version of the new midfield general added from FIFA 20 and further tuned from FIFA 21 was seen in the active roster of users and is already in the game. However, the new position, particularly the attribute control of the new position, has become the focus of much discussion. In general, the new position is useful for nearly every player in the attacking third of the field, but it is difficult to assume that players without other attributes will become much more effective at this position.

The Goalkeeper The goalkeepers in FUT have always been the most difficult to play because of their own skills and special tactics. They are not just the main defenders of your team, but also the goalkeeper of you. In FIFA 22, the new goalkeepers have been added to enrich the goalkeeper role, and they have improved their abilities. This FUT goalkeepers included four goalkeeper attributes and nine goalkeeper skills in FIFA 22, and they have given up to 25 other attributes and 105 goalkeeper skills. When compared with the previous goalkeeper game in FIFA 21, not only can the defending ability of the goalkeeper be greatly improved, but also the abilities of passing, shooting and defense have been significantly improved. FIFA 22 aims to make goalkeepers experience a more realistic and dynamic game. The number of players in the attacking team who can activate their shooting ability have increased, and the first shot that a player uses is often the opening goal. The number of players who can initiate the attack has also increased, and the goalkeeper can help with positioning to intercept passes. Attacking play will be improved with the ball at feet, and setting up plays to score is easier than ever. In particular, the goalkeeper’s ability to pass short and long, and even to shoot in tight space, has improved significantly. The offensive player in the attacking team can also now ensure that their teammates are
