Welcome to Starry Knight, an amazing RPG game that resembles many parts of titles that were made within this category before the rise of mobile gaming, and it also succeeds in producing a great novel-like vibe. By utilizing a novel-like visual style, players are suddenly immersed in the story, they need to travel across the land and finish endless quests. During these quests, players would face a variety of monsters and bosses which do not hinder their battle chances, they only become the means to motivate them to explore even more, and the story, mysterious creatures, and many other things can be fully explored and recognized by the player. The game is thus a perfect fit for those who do not like clicking thousands of times for one character. Download Starry Knight and enjoy it on your iPhone / iPad! In the year 20XX, a catastrophe called 'The Fall' swept the whole earth, on which arose four powerful and wandering beasts called 'Dungeons'. Each Dungeon comprises a perfect dungeon that would suck up any soul that is detected in the area and more; thus the dungeons have become the most dangerous things on earth. One day, in the land called 'Elfría', there was an agreement where monsters would be set free in hopes that the dungeon would disappear. After that agreement, monsters started to gradually decrease, but it was only because the gold and items had been absorbed into other dungeons. That was a period of peace where the monsters returned to the dungeons, came out for various reasons and lived in peace. However, this peace would soon be disrupted by a series of mysterious incidents. One day, there was a young man calling himself 'Nanten' that was hearing of the rumors of monsters and attempted to protect a certain mountain. His attempt was a successful one and there was a great boom. However, there was no sign of the monster at that time. It was then that Nanten received a letter from an unknown person who said to ask for a reward if he could safely cross the desert. He was then swallowed by the desert and within a week the desert seemed to overflow. He finally came to a strange city that had a black gate. He then came to a strange city and the gate was locked. He then came to a house and a woman was in there. She said to Nanten that there was a blunder in the city where he was, and thus she told him there was a treasure in the northern desert and

What's new:

The night was black with a freezing rain, made more chilling by his surroundings; an abandoned house in the middle of a fetid marsh. The hairs on his neck rose as a soft crunching noise brought him to his feet. Slipping free a Leatherman's multi-tool from the utility belt strapped to his body, the gold-framed Zap Stache took a flashlight from his right-hand pocket and turned, leveling the beam on the source of the noise before pitching the magnesium slug to the ground. "Monkey Spirits," he said then turned his attention to the clattering noise. Shadows writhed on the wall, their hands clawing at the wooden planks as the shape of a heavy, hairy man closed on its origin. Just then, his backup radio buzzed. "Spit it out!" he whispered harshly, the terror in the voices of his crewmates demanding action as they had been for just a little bit over an hour now. Keeping his grimace hidden, but not by much, the gold-toothed Stache closed on the fleeing intruder, his fingers tensing on the grips of his laser carbine. "Stop or I'll shoot!" he hissed. The figure froze, swallowed by the blackness, and that's when the Stache heard a high, maniacal scream coming from inside. Turning to face the door, he quickly opened a panel in the wall, pulling the door open and allowing his flashlight in. As he did so, the screams and yells of his fellow Yakuza's voices could be heard clearly as they engaged in combat with the invisible foe. The room was long and low, with wooden planks strewn about the once-white floors. At the rear was a staircase that turned in the floor, and what could only be assumed as a living room, at the end of it, was a half-sprawled figure draped across the floor. What looked like a homemade HEPA filter caked in mucus was hanging by several lengths of twine from the open shutters of the first-floor window. A florescent light bulb splashed a sickly green glow across the room. Frozen, the Stache let the door swing closed then stepped inside, his rifle leveled on the crumpled form on the ground and the noises from his shipmates on the floor above continuing unabated. Reaching out, he turned off his flashlight and listened to
