Q: Spark Map Reduce in python - get error when use `map(lambda x: myfunction(x)).map (...)` I have really big data with thousands records. And I write a python application using spark (pyspark) as follow: `big_data = sc.textFile(file_path) # Map function process records job_data = big_data.map(lambda x: myfunction(x)) job_data.map(lambda x: myfunction(x)).map(...)` # Reduce to sum function `job_data.reduce(lambda x, y: x + y)` In here, if I comment the `map(lambda x: myfunction(x))` of `job_data`, the program run well. But it's not efficient as I expected when I apply the `map(lambda x: myfunction(x))` of `job_data`. Are there any solutions to speed up the process? The function of `myfunction()` is very heavy and is not compute efficient. A: I had the same problem, and solved it by using only one map function `big_data = sc.textFile(file_path) # Map function process records job_data = big_data.map`
