You can also save your work as a PDF file. * Content Management System (CMS) capable. InDesign can edit digital asset files created using Adobe Acrobat and PageMaker. InDesign's CMS is based on a 100-percent cross-platform operating system and supports the same file types. * Open Document Format (.odt). InDesign can read a wide range of XML-based document formats, such as .txt, .rtf, and .docx, which makes it an excellent choice for creating template documents that can be used throughout the organization. * Translations. * If you're creating PDF files and are interested in creating multiple language versions of your document, you can easily generate them with the help of Photoshop and the PDF printer that comes with Adobe Acrobat. The end result is a pair of PDFs that can be printed and viewed in multiple languages. InDesign is an excellent software program for creating marketing collaterals, with the ability to create white space and off-screen content that can be presented on a computer monitor or a cinema-quality projector without displaying the content on a computer screen. InDesign is worth purchasing if you regularly create PDF files for marketing.

You can download the software at Adobe.com. Before installing the software, make sure you have a Windows XP/ Vista/ Windows 7/ Windows 8 operating system. You also need to download the right version of Adobe Photoshop software. The software will run only on the operating system indicated in the download. Once you have the right version of Adobe Photoshop software installed on your computer, we need to familiarize ourselves with Photoshop Elements and know how to open, close and customize it. Open Photoshop Elements From the menu bar, click on File > New. Once it opens, Photoshop Elements has the following options on the open screen. Graphics > Image File > Open Image > Open (for Large and RAW files) Tools > Adjustments File > Save As Image > Save As (for Large and RAW files) We will cover most of the options individually. Graphics The Graphics window is the canvas for the image, just as the Photoshop editor is the canvas for the image. In this section we change the size and shape of the canvas, as well as the view and sort the canvas. To set the canvas size: Click on the “Widt” and “Heigt” buttons (Widht and Height) on the upper left corner of the canvas screen. At the bottom of the canvas, you will find a horizontal line that indicates the canvas size. You can increase or decrease the canvas size, by dragging the right or left handle. You can zoom in and out on the image with the “Zoom” button on the top right corner of the canvas screen. The size of the canvas is set by the amount of zoom you perform. The default scale is 100%. When you zoom in, the canvas size increases. When you zoom out, the canvas size decreases. If you would like to enter an intermediate scale, click on the Zoom In button to open the Zoom In dialog box. When you zoom in, the higher the resolution, the better the image. Click on the “Pan” button on the top right corner of the canvas screen to make the image rotate around a central point, from top left to bottom right to view the image as a mirror image of the original. The “Redo” and “Cancel” buttons can be used

Q: Testing method with fake DB & shoulda matchers I am testing a Rails app that accesses the DB to find out if the user is logged in. I can use shoulda matchers to check if the method was called as expected, but when the methods prints output or fails, I end up wondering why my expectation wasn't met. So I want to capture this output and store it in a variable for later checking, but I don't know how to go about that. How can I check the output of the method?

context 'when login false' do before(:each) do
    @address = create :address
    #@user = create :user
    #@user_email = create :user, email: 'test@example.com'
    login(@user, false)
  end
  it 'should not be logged in' do expect(Login).to have_received(:logged_in?) #Nope!

A: By the looks of it your test is failing because the object `logged_in?` is not the same as the method. It looks to me like the `:logged_in?` method is a member of the user object which means that your test will always fail. You can remedy this by stubbing in the real login method and returning an object with the method `logged_in?` that is the same as your fake one.

context 'when login false' do before do
    # methods are not part of the model or model objects in rspec
    # so you do not need to stub them here
    # just make a

dummy log in method that returns a user object # that has the same version of the method as your fake object create :user @user = create :user user_log_in_as(@user, false) end it'should not be logged in' do expect(user_log_in_as(@user, false)).to have_received(:logged_in?) #you no longer need a fake here # your current implementation will return the object and have_received will pass

[Dilatation of the internal ring and holmium laser enucleation of the prostate: our preliminary experience]. The holmium laser energy, besides offering a laser conduction safety, has the additional advantage of heating cavities by absorption of energy absorbed by the medium and, as a consequence, it has an intra-luminal spread and a variety of applications with the purpose of ablation, incision and dilatation. The application of this technique for treatment of lower urinary tract symptoms has been successfully demonstrated and our preliminary experience is reported. In 34 patients between 64 and 86 years of age (mean: 76) with prostatic hyperplasia 8 (23%) had a history of previous surgical treatment with transurethral resection of the prostate (TURP). After being informed about the laser energy, 7 patients refused TURP and 20 agreed to undergo a new surgical procedure and to have data about clinical outcomes evaluated. Mean weight was 79.5 Kg (range 59-100) and mean prostate volume was 37 cc (range: 20-80). In 5 patients with small prostate (20-25 cc) TURP was performed beforehand, the prostate was incised and resected via transvesical route. All procedures were completed with only minor morbidity. After 24 hours of catheterization the mean peak urinary flow rate was 14.8 cc/min (range 6-25).
