Q: Static IPv4 address for iOS - but I need dynamic I'm using this library for my iOS app. It has so many nice features, that I would like to use it. However, now I need to set the self.address to a static IPv4 address. Do you know what happens if one does that for iOS? Will it still be able to update the DNS record (and not make things worse)? Is there any way to avoid that? If I need a dynamic IP, why do I need such a static one? Why do I need to upload a file with static IPs? It works fine and the APNS and push notifications are set up with it, but I can't understand, why one needs the DNS server. A: I had a very similar problem yesterday. First make sure your configuration file is saved, as it will be removed when you restart the application. Go to the DD Manger and locate your iDevice: You should see the iPhone heading at the bottom right. Double click on that to open the Applications and delete the current application(s) in there. You'll now be able to see all the apps associated with the device. NOTE: If you have any background applications running and the device is offline, you will have to delete those applications from the device before this will work. Type in ipconfig /all on the phone and note the ip address. If you get a private IP address you will need to use the ip address without the subnet mask. Now upload a file to iCloud called ipconfig -4 to the drive and open it with your favorite text editor. I usually use vi, it's really easy to use. Add a few more static IP addresses to the config file, e.g. ipconfig -4 up 1.2.3.4 255.255.0.0 2.2.2.2 255.255.255.0 3.3.3.3 255.255.255.0. Save the file Reboot the phone Now you should be able to ping static IP addresses on the device. You won't be able

In these portable terminals, if network connection is not carried out, various kinds of information are displayed in a screen of the portable terminal without communication for convenience. In connection with this, there has been proposed a display method in which when a network is connected, a network type is displayed in a screen without communications (for example, see patent document 1). However, a user sometimes undesirably wants a predetermined information not displayed in a screen even in a state where communication is not carried out, but a display method for displaying the information as desired has not been established yet. Further, when the display method as described above is adopted for a portable terminal, a problem of a screen being cluttered with information or the like may occur. It is desired to provide a function of easily performing a desired display method. [Patent Document 1] Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 2013-121530 The present invention has been made in view of the above problems, and provides a display method and a display device in which it is possible to easily perform
