Q: Video Not Streaming or Vimeo Playlist stream not playing I have made a video player, which works for any stream unless it is from Vimeo. I call the url below directly from my site and it works every time. But I have included it in a playlist of vimeo videos and it does not play (no video feed, it just says 'loading'). I have tried a number of things, including changing the url to: Changing the header-expire-seconds in apache to 3000 Moved the relative urls to an absolute url Other than this, I am quite stuck. EDIT: I have just tested loading the video directly from a youtube url, which works, so its not the video of it. Any suggestions? Thanks A: With regards to your update; This issue has been identified and confirmed by them... Here is the fix for the issue FYI Vimeo Player: If the server happens to send the Referer header with a request for a third-party resource, then the player fails to load because it will not authenticate to any third-party server. To prevent this problem from causing the player to fail to load, we force all requests for third-party resources to include the following header: x-vimeo-has-sync-token:true They have asked me to post the new link to their forums here for fixing the issue for other people, so other people can post it to their forums Thursday, January 28, 2014 Today we're taking a look at a gun from another era. This is a Browning Model 1910, chambered in a good old.41 caliber with a single stack 9mm cartridge as well. Of course, most of you know there was a.41 Remington cartridge made in the 1920s but it wasn't until the 1920s that the.41 Remington was adopted as a service or duty cartridge. With all this being said, the Model

Craig Venter and Juan Carlos Izpisúa Belmonte have been awarded the 2011 Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine, for their discovery of "new ways of acquiring genetic information", in particular the ways used by "pathogenic bacteria", and their development of technology to read and write DNA. Venter, who was President and CEO of the public Human Genome Project, is best known for his scientific achievement in cracking the genetic code of life and for his determination to publish all human DNA sequences immediately, so that scientists could begin to understand it, and use it to improve human health and well-being. He is credited with sequencing the whole human genome in just four years from 1989 to 1993, a feat never before achieved by one team. Towards the end of that project, Venter and a team of US scientists launched the Human Genome Diversity Project (HGDP), in pursuit of finding differences among human populations. In the course of investigating those differences, they discovered genetic variations in different human populations that were associated with conditions such as sickle cell anemia, susceptibility to malaria, and skin colour. Read more: No-one wants a human clone – for now, anyway The project identified the specific genes and mutations responsible for each variation, and demonstrated the presence of genetic diversity among human populations that had not previously been appreciated. Venter remains the director of the Institute for Genomic Research (TIGR) in Rockville, Maryland, which serves as the HGDP's successor. In addition, he serves as Director of the Kavli Institute for Theoretical Physics at Santa Barbara University. In 1993, Venter founded Celera Genomics, which took full advantage of the newly-available DNA sequencing technology and became the world's first publicly-funded, privately-owned genomics company. In 2013, Venter launched a new company called Editas Medicine, which has developed and licensed a technology that allows a physician to quickly and cheaply sequence a patient's entire genome and provide customized treatment plans. The global implications of the research that the two scientists have carried out are, of course, immense, but more importantly, the scientific and technological advances they have enabled seem almost commonplace today.
