This invention relates to methods and apparatuses for detecting a surface flaw or crack on a moving surface, and more particularly to the use of a tunneling apparatus for generating a high-velocity jet to detect such flaws or cracks. Many moving surfaces such as the surfaces of oil pipelines may become cracked or otherwise flawed due to changes in the fluid flowing therethrough, or as a result of being dragged over a rough surface. These flaws may be of critical importance to the operation of the surface and may present a hazard if not detected in a timely fashion. In one prior known technique, a direct current surface flaw detector is used to scan the surface,
