The film tells the story of the life of Mexican.Q: Can't extend primary key field on SQL Server I have a table with an IDENTITY/PRIMARY KEY constraint and, a procedure which inserts data into this table. SQL Server CE is the database. I want to extend the length of the primary key field. I insert data from the main application to this table, then I use the database function sp_rename 'table.column', 'newname'. Then I execute a schema change to change the length of the column to 30. It works most of the time. It would be great if the length could be fixed, but it changes between 1 and 100 inserts per second, so a script is needed. As soon as I run the procedure again, the error: Cannot extend an identity column to a new value occurs. I tried to open the table in SQL Server Management Studio, but I get the error: Cannot open object "table" because it is either missing in the database or is not accessible from the current database. Any ideas what I'm doing wrong?
