What's New In TTView?

TTView's aim is to allow a user to customize a TomTom navigation device according to their own personal preferences, in order to increase the efficiency of their navigation device. Applications OrthoViewer is an application for orthogonal tomography in 2D and 3D. It combines a modified version of the ray rendering algorithm from the TomiT program with orthogonal segmentation. It can be used to display two- or three-dimensional volumes. TOMCAT is an OpenGL-based 3D Java viewer to display tomographic sections, and possibly other volumes. TOMCAT can also calculate the projective transforms from the rotation matrix to show a perspective view. TOMAS is a Java based framework and API allowing to create and modify the contents of a TomoDirect MR sequence file. TOMAS is written in Java and uses the Java language features to ease the development. TomoHD is an open-source Java Media Framework for 3D display of volumetric medical image data. It enables the display of any volumetric data, whether as stereoscopic slices, multiple images, multiplanar views, and other representations. It can be controlled and manipulated using a variety of other Java technologies.Live Cell Spatiotemporal Two-Photon Microscopy Live Cell Spatiotemporal Two-Photon Microscopy, the second of two articles that makes up a special issue of the Journal of Cell Science on the combination of live-cell imaging and advanced optical microscopy, reports on the use of two-photon excitation microscopy in biomedical research. "The application of two-photon excitation microscopy to biological science has been a major source of excitement over the past five years. Up until now, however, this imaging modality has primarily been applied to the study of tissues, for which it has proven to be a powerful optical tool," says first author Stefan Ebling. "The spectra and spatial properties of two-photon absorption are especially favorable for the excitation of calcium indicators, which are typically employed for the measurement of intracellular calcium activity in neurons." Now researchers from Ernst Ruska — now called the Max Planck Institute for Biophysical Chemistry — demonstrate, for the first time, that two-photon excitation microscopy is applicable to highly dynamic cellular processes, such as the movement of cells in embryonic development. This paper is
