What's new in The Eerie Inn:

Mimic Hunter, known in Europe as Mimic: Ascension is a 2001 American science-fiction horror film that was released in the United Kingdom under the title Revelations: Ascension. The film was directed by Harold Cronk. The film is about Sarah Chapman, a woman who must save her son, Tommy (Jeremy Rodgers), from being experimented on by a cult using a worm-like creature. Plot Sarah Chapman (Sharon Elizabeth), a mother, is in charge of her missing son Tommy (Jeremy Rodgers) and is going insane from worrying about his safety. One night, she manages to save Tommy and immediately calls in the police to help her look for him. The police, however, does not seem very interested in finding Tommy. The next day, Sarah is distracted caring for her baby, and the baby falls out of a window. Soon after this, however, the police finds Sarah's baby's remains and dismisses her story that the baby fell out of the window. Later, Sarah meets with a doctor, played by Raymond Cruz, who is telling her that Tommy is being taken to a medical research facility. The doctor tells Sarah that he lied about the research. He tells Sarah that the lab is going to test a worm-like creature, and that Tommy will be the first subject. Sarah goes immediately to the doctor's house to stop him, but it turns out that the doctor is terminally ill and is dying. The doctor tells Sarah about a worm-like creature called the Mimic, which he has kept in a high-security salt mine. The Mimic is in rare form and only comes out at night to feel the air and hunt prey, and to make its victims think that they are alone. The doctor tells Sarah that the only way to stop the Mimic is to lock it into a cave that is constantly being lit by the sun's rays; this prevents the Mimic from moving. With this knowledge, Sarah and Tommy leave the lab to seek out the salt mine. Sarah makes the trip in a makeshift car, but Tommy, who cannot sit up anymore, gets a ride from an abandoned motorcycle. They make it to the entrance of the salt mine and quickly investigate, but discover that the entrance has been sealed with cement. The entire area is pitch-black, except for the occasional light that guides their way. However, Tommy is losing his eyesight and is about to faint from the darkness. Sarah revives Tommy by bringing the car to a stop
