I have a UICollectionView in a UINavigationController with all the collection view cells being UICollectionViewCell. I then tap on the cell to change its value. The value then changes in the dataSource that is set on the class level. This then loads another view controller, which contains the UICollectionView as the navigation view. This all works fine. However, the problem is that after the value has changed, I start getting the following memory warning: Warning: Attempt to present on whose view is not in the window hierarchy! As I understand it, this is because I have lost the reference to the UICollectionViewCell and the view is no longer in the view hierarchy. So how do I stop this? A: Right. The view is not in the hierarchy. You need to create a new instance of the cell and insert it into the collection. Then you can retain it. For example: in viewDidLoad: self.collection = [[UICollectionView alloc] initWithFrame:CGRectMake(0, 0, 320, 460)].insert your custom cell here UICollectionView * collectionView = [UICollectionView alloc] initWithFrame:CGRectMake(x, y, w, h) [collectionView addSubview:view]; [self.collectionView addItem:view cellAtIndex:indexPath]; Then in your cellForItemAtIndexPath
