But I guess that's a question of personal choice (as you'd expect). For example; BBS software can be a little more "pester-y" than internet software, so I tend to stick to bbs software as much as I can, but when I have to I can always get onto an internet forum and network, no problem. If you're planning a career with computers though, internet software will definitely give you more opportunities. If you're planning to just learn at home and use the internet, then I'd be more inclined to agree with what James says. Like I said, the internet is a lot more "hassle-free" and I find it way easier to get anything I want done. Hope that helps. I don't think you'll get a simple answer because it really varies from person to person.
