A: I am not sure why you have been storing your email addresses as variables in your code. However, if you wish to leave them there for now, you will need to use `map` to convert the contents of each email address string into a respective map element, so that you can get the corresponding `k` from there. For instance: val (m1, m2) = emails.map(_.split('@') match { case Array("mail1", "mail2") => (Map("mail1"

-> 1, "mail2" -> 2), Map("mail1" -> 1,
"mail2" -> 2)) case Array("mail1",
"mail1@mail2.com") => (Map("mail1" ->
1, "mail1@mail2.com" -> 1), Map("mail1"
-> 1, "mail1@mail2.com" -> 2)) case
Array("mail1@mail2.com", "mail2") => (Map("mail1@mail2.com" -> 1, "mail2"
-> 2), Map("mail1@mail2.com" -> 2))
case Array("mail1@mail2.com",
"mail1@mail2.com") =>
(Map("mail1@mail2.com" -> 1,
"mail1@mail2.com" -> 1),
Map("mail1@mail2.com" -> 2)) case _ => throw new Exception("Invalid email

found.") }) Now you can use m1 and m2 as the values for your --servers argument, and k as the value for your --mailFrom option. You might be wondering about the reason for the if-else in your code. That is because you have two different email addresses for one email address. For instance, I just ran your command on my system and got this: The first of the two emails' attempts seems to have worked for some reason, as it outputs these (note the in red box): Your first if-else block should not work. Your regex should never have matched an email address ending in "mail2", for example. For example:

val regex =
    """"(?i)^\.[\@]\S{2,3}[\.|\s]\S{2,}$""".r //
    d0c515b9f4
