And it's really hard. And it's really hard because even when we're doing that, we don't just feel awkward, we get scared. Like, what if this whole room is just effing up? What if this is not okay? What if I'm wasting a whole day so I can… just… put this stuff in it. What if I just do not know how to do this? This is so weird. This is not normal. What if that's why I'm having fun with this?! Because the kind of fear we're experiencing now is the kind of fear that gives us implant is highly hydroxyapatite-tricalcium phosphate with stromal vascular fraction (HAS+TCP) in the structure of cancellous type bone. The composite implant consists of four components: a porous ceramic support, vascularized bone graft, autologous bone graft, and the final implant material.

Each component is manufactured separately with the different process, and is processed to form the complex structure that consists of a porous ceramic support, vascularized bone graft, autologous bone graft, and final implant material. Hydroxyapatite-tricalcium phosphate ceramic is highly bioactive and has an excellent biological response, so that the composite implant can be remodeled to new bone in a form of a void-free osteoconductive implant that can not only restore the anatomic shape of the bone, but also provide excellent fixation to the surrounding bone.
