The jury program is a collection of several decision making tasks in one package. All tasks are solved separately using the JPC interface. You can create tasks for real litigation or simulate litigation in order to test your system. The jury program allows you to choose the location of the JPC application, the criteria that should be checked and which data should be shown on the screen during a trial. JPC supports the following: Actions on paper documents. JPC also supports the display of the paper documents and search through them. Files available on a local network. The JPC interface is a modular application. You can define the additional files that you want to display in the documentation. Data from different information systems. You can combine several data to check the document and cross-check them to recognize similar cases. Document production in JPC. You can print the documentation in sections, cut them and paste them in other documents. Document transfer in JPC. You can transfer the information from one or several original documents to a reference document, which will be modified during the trial. Document logging in JPC. This is the best way to check the documents, because you can check them as well as the evidences that come with them.
