A: This is a standard way to do it download an offline version of MS ClickOnce find the folder of this downloaded version copy everything inside it to your desktop open regedit go to : HKEY_LOCAL_MACHINE\SOFTWARE\Microsoft\ClickOnce\ui\ if there is no string named InstallDir, copy everything inside the first folders listed under that key and paste it to your desktop find the folder of the file on your desktop named as an update and copy everything inside it to your desktop open CMD and type > C:\Program Files\WindowsApps\update.app type cd\ and press enter copy everything inside the folder you copied to your desktop in the first two steps, paste it into C:\Program Files\WindowsApps\ If the Update: is present, you do not have to copy the update.app folder, because it is already here. If it isn't, you have to do these steps 1-4 Open an elevated command prompt or PowerShell cd\ to the folder you just pasted earlier type Update.app\install.exe /uninstall with the quotes. You'll be able to install the app again type Update.app\setup.exe with the quotes. You'll be able to update again. If you get "Update.app doesn't exist" error, use the registry method mentioned here Q: How to use range or simple for to define a variable in python? I am new to Python. I want to do like this in Python: for i in range(1000,2000): x = i so that the x is 2000 at last. A: When you try this, you'll get a SyntaxError. This is because Python does not have a for-in statement. What you are trying to do is commonly known as a "Lazy generator". The idea is to use a call-back so that you can produce a generator that's evaluated later. from itertools import islice for i in islice(xrange(1000,2000), len(xrange(1000,2000))): print i You can also see an answer to the question here: Python Iterate over list of items 1. (Getty) By Zach Abolverdi | Senior Writer The SEC East race will be decided in the city of Mobile Saturday night as the River Region and the University of South Alabama will meet in a showdown for a spot in the conference championship. The Red Wolves are defending national champions and the only undefeated team in the conference while the Golden Tide are riding high off an upset over LSU. The two programs are on completely different pages. The Red Wolves are coming off of back-to-back wins while the Golden Tide have seen a three-game losing streak. This game, though, is anything but an average matchup. Red Wolves Head Coach Tyson Summers said his team is playing for the city of Mobile and the area of the world that shares similar sentiments. "We are going to play for our city, our region and our state because they deserve it," Summers said. "It's their team and we want to be part of the history that's about to be made in the playoffs. It's all about them 0cc13bf012

Is there an integration test option to just run the tests in the same way as the rake test task does? A: If you're testing with rails_ujs and js_elided you can do something like this: require'spec_helper' include Rails.application.routes.url_helpers config.include(javascript: { urls: %w[#{Rails.application.routes.url_helpers.root_path} /test/integration]}) module TestHelper def turbolinks_tests begin require "turbolinks" require "turbolinks/fixtures" include Turbolinks rescue LoadError end end end describe "Home page" do before(:each) do Turbolinks::Fixtures.activate Turbolinks::Middleware.visit(:all) ... end after(:each) do Turbolinks::Middleware.visit(:all) Turbolinks::Fixtures.drop end it "sets the page title" do page.title.should.
