Visual LISP Visual LISP, which was initially released as a development tool in 1980, was designed to increase productivity in the design and construction of architectural, architectural engineering and interior projects by providing architects, designers, drafters and illustrators with a ready-made language for creating, modifying and analyzing 2D and 3D drawings. The use of Visual LISP within the AutoCAD Download With Full Crack application provided the ability to rapidly share, synchronize and collect information from complex drawings. Visual LISP can be used with all AutoCAD Download With Full Crack versions; however, the latest version of Visual LISP requires AutoCAD Activation Code 2010 to operate and can be easily updated to work with AutoCAD 2014. Visual LISP is not a programming language; rather, it is a set of user-defined symbols (or function keys) that can be used to customize the user interface to a specific application. The primary purpose of Visual LISP was to create symbols that could be used to create custom user interface elements such as tools, menus, dialog boxes, and other display elements. AutoCAD does not include a programming language; however, Visual LISP provides a basic programming language known as AutoLISP. AutoLISP was developed at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colorado, and was initially released in 1984 to create custom graphic displays. AutoLISP is compatible with all AutoCAD versions, although the latest version requires AutoCAD 2010 to operate and can be easily updated to work with AutoCAD 2014. AutoLISP is not a programming language; rather, it is a set of user-defined symbols (or function keys) that can be used to customize the user interface to a specific application. AutoLISP is a series of Common Lisp dialect extensions to the user interface that enables the creation of graphical user interfaces for Windows applications. A variety of AutoLISP visual languages are available for AutoCAD, including: Blob, Circle, Curve, Custom Line, Dimension, DoubleArrow,

Gradient, Linetype, Line, LineType, List, Polyline, Rectangle, Rounded Rectangle, SolidFill, Stroke, Symbol, Text, TextBox, ThickerLine, ThinnerLine, ThinLine, Tool, Triangle, Vector, X, Y, ca3bfb1094

Maronites The Maronites (, Maronitēs, Latin: Marones), known as Maronites in English, are a Catholic Christian community native to Lebanon, formed by the Monothelites and led by Bishop Ignatius Michael III (Shaheen) of Antioch. The Maronites are a Greek Rite Catholic Christian community with their own liturgy, bishops, and church structure. They belong to the Eastern Catholic Church, and receive their episcopal ordination from the patriarch of the West Syriac Rite. The Maronite church in Lebanon is the second largest Christian community in the country and is officially estimated at 2,800,000. The Maronite Church in the diaspora in North America, South America, Australia, and the Western world are estimated to number more than 700,000.

History

Origins The Eastern Orthodox Maronites trace their origin to the Church of Saint Mary of Antioch, which was founded in 300 by the Apostles Gregory of Nazianzus and Basil of Caesarea. The Maronites, who are orthodox in their beliefs, held that by the time of Patriarch Nestorius (425), their church, which was being persecuted, had expanded to the area of Qaraoun in Lebanon. The Maronites were the most persecuted of the Syrians in the early period, and in the 5th and 6th centuries were forced to flee the country and were scattered throughout the Roman Empire. There were a number of Maronite communities throughout the Roman Empire, including one in Syria, one in Egypt, and the majority settled in Lebanon. During this time, the Maronite churches were permitted to remain in communion with the Eastern Orthodox Church, as the Oriental Orthodox Church had yet to be established. The Maronites were Eastern Orthodox until the 9th century.

Return to Antioch After the Muslim conquest of Syria and Mesopotamia, a number of Eastern Orthodox Christian communities were forced to return to Antioch from Syria. In the late 9th century, the Eastern Orthodox Patriarch of Antioch, Ignatius IV (867–870) decreed that the Maronites were to be reconciled with the Eastern Orthodox Church. The first bishop
