Inactivation of bacteria by ozone treatment with a continuous circulating flow system was studied. The continuous circulating flow system was composed of two parallel quartz glass tubes that were filled with ozone-containing water. The head-space of one tube was charged with nitrogen gas. The length of the two tubes was more than 10 times the diameter of the tubes. The lower ozone concentration in the upper tube than in the lower tube was observed in the head-space of the lower tube. The head-space gas/ozone molar ratio in the upper tube was approximately two times higher than that in the lower tube. Inactivation of Salmonella Typhimurium and Escherichia coli O157:H7 were examined at different pH values (3.8, 5.0, and 6.0) in the two parallel quartz glass tubes. Inactivation of E. coli O157:H7 at a dose of 60 mg/L of ozone was approximately 97% within 10 min at pH 5.0 and 6.0. However, the numbers of inactivated Salmonella Typhimurium cells at pH 5.0 and 6.0 were one-tenth of those at pH 3.8. The results show that a continuous circulating flow reactor is effective for inactivation of E. coli O157:H7, which is more easily inactivated than Salmonella Typhimurium. The results also show that the characteristics of bacterial inactivation in a continuous circulating flow system were strongly affected by the gas/ozone molar ratio.Activity and macrophage localization of HIV type 1-specific cellular immune responses in HIV-infected individuals. This study was performed to determine which peripheral immune system compartments are most frequently infected in patients with human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) type 1 (HIV-1). Peripheral blood mononuclear cells were stimulated with autologous HIV-1-infected and uninfected control cells, and interferon-gamma production was used to measure the cellular immune response in vitro. We measured the activity e79ca774b

I think that there's a straightforward way, without thinking about the elements that are not in I . A: Suppose that $J \subsetneq I$ is an ideal such that $J \neq I$. By the definition of ideals, there exist $f \in I$, and $g \notin I$ such that $fg \in I \cap J = \{0\}$, which is a contradiction. Hence, I is maximal. A: This is just a duplicate of [1]. Proof of Note: Because every subring of the field of reals is a quotient ring of the polynomial ring $\mathbb{R}[x, y]$, the ideal $I = \langle x^2 + y^2 - 1 \rangle$ is maximal in $\mathbb{R}[x, y]$. [1] Q: Do we need a [one-day-clipper] tag? As far as I can see, only one question is tagged with this tag, and it is clearly about one-day
