Benchmarks and IPOs are up sharply, while the number of initial public offerings in April and May were up significantly compared to the same time period last year. For online commercial real estate players, however, this year's IPO process is going to be anything but easy. According to CBRE Group, there will be more than 200 IPOs this year, and the number of players seeking listings is expected to far exceed the number of offerings. But here is something to keep in mind. During the trading period, the bankers that are managing a company through its IPO process will often make the very first deal. In those instances, they become the most formidable competition, since the bankers will only agree to one deal, and that deal is going to be theirs. Moreover, the bankers will be able to use their substantial experience to negotiate a better deal than an arm's length party would be able to offer. This means that even if a company is offering shares that are fair in valuation and risk profile, the bankers will be able to negotiate an attractive deal and take a majority share. This is where the challenges for online real estate companies come into play. First, for many of the companies, finding a listing advisor is still a challenge. Many successful deals are found by finding an advisor willing to work on the deal with the investor. If a company is not able to find a listing advisor, or find a listing advisor that can really offer value, then the company will have a difficult time. Second, for an online commercial real estate company to have the best deal, it needs to have several issues that it can overcome. The company must have a solid owner, a good management team, an operating team that is able to sell the business, and obviously, a valuation that is attractive to all market
