The following correction was printed in the Guardian's Corrections and clarifications column, Friday 9 October 2011: When this article was first published below, it misspelled the name of the river Dee. It has now been corrected. The Scottish Nationalists lost in the referendum on Scottish independence in September, but in doing so, they have succeeded in rebranding the referendum as a vote on European federalism. A new political strategy, they contend, is needed to stop the decline of the Union. This is unlikely to work. It is not clear whether, post-independence, a federal Britain would be an attractive place to live or work. However, in a post-independence

Scotland, it may be – as the rhetoric over the past few years suggests – a "better" Scotland. The Nationalists stress the achievement that Scotland would be able to "stand alone" as an independent nation. Scotland currently shares a currency and a common law system with England. Although the Nationalists say Scotland could go it alone on everything from energy to defence, this does not mean it would be an independent nation. Scotland would remain a "state" of the UK. It is likely Scotland would continue to share many things with England and it would remain a constituent part of the UK. The nationalists emphasise that Scots would be able to share their own culture and their own identity; they would have their own laws and legal system. Yet Scotland would still share political institutions with England. Although the SNP stress that this might be rather different to the existing system, it is unclear how it might be different. Some believe that in a new Scotland, government would be more democratic. This is unlikely. Scotland's current laws were based on giving the vote to 20 per cent of the population; it is hard to imagine how this might change. The Nationalists have said that a new Scotland would be a Scottish government. However, this government would be under the umbrella of a UK government. As for fiscal policies, some nationalists claim that the UK government would be forced to respect the wishes of Scotland.

Q: Enabling Mysql Triggers

Hi all, I am brand new to Mysql (for a long time used the old Toad 6.8 version and like it so far), and I want to use Mysql for sql storage with PHP. I setup a server, and installed Mysql and its debian packages with apt. I have a php script I'm testing and want to include a mysql triggers function. The code is as follows:

$db='database_name'; $client=mysql_connect("localhost","user_name","password"); mysql_select_db($db,$client); $sql='CREATE TABLE `test` ( `column1` varchar(300), `column2` varchar(300), `column3` varchar(300) )'; mysql_query($sql); mysql_query('DROP TRIGGER IF EXISTS "after_insert"); mysql_query('CREATE TRIGGER "after_insert" AFTER INSERT ON `test` FOR EACH ROW BEGIN INSERT INTO

``another_table` (`id_column`, `column`)
VALUES (NEW.`id_column`,
NEW.`column2`); END'`); First I had no idea about Mysql triggers, but I was wondering if there was some
