version of Minecraft may be getting an entire island added to the game, which will help the developers out when they are adding more maps to the game. In a demo of the new island "Nomnestia," there is a significant plot hole that makes the development team react by adding a new island to the game to cover this hole. The main landmass that the player is in right now is made up of four out of the five islands available in the game. It is more than evident that the developers are more focused on adding more islands to the game. A few years ago, the developers of Minecraft mentioned in an interview that they would be able to add more than 100 islands to the game. However, now that the game has already been made for two years, it can be said that they added more than enough new islands. The new island is 17 by 17 blocks in size and it is made up of only one biome. It is known as the "Tortuga," which is the name of the wood biome in the tropical area of the Caribbean. The map has a combination of puzzle and exploration, in which the user will have to break an open chest in order to find more of
