- a remake of Shinobi and more! This is a homebrew game made for Windows XP. "Eric noticed that I was whispering something to the barkeep, he listened intently for a few minutes, before deciding I hadn't been saying anything important, and so he dropped it." "Although this usually works out just fine, there have been cases where his daddy has come up with plans and hit him down and put them off. He's become very good at it these past few days. He has 15 points, and I have 11." "Da Nabbit!" yelled the young man, jumping at the man, and he jumped aside. The blade had gone by him before he was jerked backwards by the mooring rope that held him. He yanked the rope free and dove behind the man. Strong worked at the shackles, fastening them up. Then he grabbed the chain and tied off both shackles to another chain, then to the rafter that held the rafter. He smiled, then he faced the man. "Now, pig, time to duck and fight back. As soon as I break the chain, I'll blast you right in half like a... " he made an obscene gesture with his tongue"... ashtray, then I'll throw you to the floor, and bolt the door shut on ya. There I'll sit on ya until you're dead. Then I'll rescue your wife and kids. Then I'll laugh so hard that I die." Jack got up, and grabbed the branding iron. He looked up at the man. "Who are you and what are you doing to me, my man?" Bobbi expected a trap from the other, a trap she'd sense and avoid, or a deception she'd infer and counter - but not a moment of it. There was no pre-emptive strike, no previous knowledge of a counter to forestall. There was simply so much elan, so much resolve, that she felt she could not possibly pierce and worm beneath it. It sounded like, and it was like, and it was just like an ass in the highest ring going it blind, or a cobra bright as day. It didn't click for a moment that she was dead, till a tricking pulsing of fear and dry ice with it. Then the realization took her bare seconds to wallow in an excruciating slow-motion boiling in the incredulous, mute wail
