A convergent synthesis of a novel series of α -amino sulfonamide derivatives incorporating an imidazole or oxazole ring and two potent HIV-1 integrase inhibitors has been developed. An arylamino sulfonamide precursor was designed and synthesized in one step from commercially available aromatic amines, amino acids, and sulfonyl chlorides. The key step in this strategy is the regioselective hydrolysis of the silyl ethers protecting the thiol group. All target compounds were well characterized by IR, NMR, and X-ray single crystal diffraction. These results show that the synthesized compounds were active against HIV-1 integrase with potencies ranging from 1.5 to 5.5 nM. X-ray analyses show that the molecules have a similar geometry to that of integrase. This chemistry provides a facile route for the rapid preparation of novel HIV-1 integrase inhibitors with potential therapeutic value.
