What's new in Hand Cannon Virtuoso:

(1) my Uncle Earl installed a new kind of lock in my house about a few months ago. At first, it wasn't a problem. The lock had enough klicks to work correctly, which meant that the doorknob turned without first having to get my jumper out of the lock or anything. The problem started when I decided to try to unlock it myself. After the doorknob turned once, it turned again. This continued until I was putting my towel on my shower door frame. I was ready to go take a shower, but then I thought "why am I doing this?" I don't even know what lock this is. Granted, I've only lived here for a few months (maybe 9 or so) but eventually I was able to remember where I've seen other locks before and how to unlock them. Eventually, the nice thing about this lock was that it stayed unlocked a lot of the time. This is great for my original purposes. He just needs time to think through the problems of a random lock. Ever since the installation, it has been pretty annoying to get in and out of the house. Either the lock was too fast or too slow, so more times than not, I have to wait for someone else to get out of the house so I can get in. This has been pretty different than the first time I was locked out of my house ("We can't find the keys"). This was the time that I can really tell a story about. She was something of a shadow. She moved on the edges of the parking garage. She went back into the house a few times, but seemed to disappear each time I saw her. I never saw her go to her back door, which helps because it means she doesn't have a duffle bag. (She might have one with duffel pants, but those look like the kind of pants the homeless guy in the city would wear.) Having slept in my friends' basement complex for the past month or so, I was expecting to see more familiar people. This is the primary reason I took the cab home from the concert. Even though I hadn't slept
