Characterization of the bovine gut bacterial community in relation to the animals and milk production by DGGE analysis of PCR-amplified V3 and V6 16S rDNA regions. The aim of this study was to characterize the structure of the bovine gut bacterial communities in relation to the animals and milk production. This was accomplished by using denaturing gradient gel electrophoresis (DGGE) analysis of PCR-amplified V3 and V6 16S rDNA variable regions from the gut microbial communities of nine cows from three herds. DGGE of the two PCR amplicons revealed the presence of six distinctive bands. Molecular analysis of the DGGE bands from the V3 region indicated the presence of three groups of bacteria of which the two most abundant were affiliated with members of the genera Bifidobacterium (B. breve and B. bifidum) and Lactobacillus (L. acidophilus and L. crispatus). The fourth most prevalent group included members of the genera Prevotella and Bacteroides. Analysis of the V6 region of the two PCR products revealed the presence of three and four DGGE bands, respectively. The identified bands were affiliated with members of the genera Prevotella and Bacteroides. The evidence from this study demonstrated the presence of specific bacterial populations, such as Bifidobacterium and Lactobacillus, that appeared to be restricted to the bovine gut bacterial community and were influenced by the animals and milk production.JavaScript is currently disabled.Please enable it for a better experience of Jumi.
