EASEUS Lite 8.3 Build 3734 Crack + License Key Download! and many more programs.Q: Why does this generic not accept its type as a generic argument? I'm writing a renderer for HTML5 Canvas. To ease down the interface, I have an intermediate page that provides a (general) set of Drawable objects (which are a Widget-derived hierarchy) to the renderer. The intermediate page defines a class (Widget) that is used to create a generic type-set of Drawables and cache them. The final rendering is pretty specific but the intermediate page does it generically. The current rendering of the intermediate page is as follows: `public class RenderIntermediatePage where T : Drawable { public void Render(T drawable) { // Draw } }` The problem is that this is not quite right. I need the intermediate page to be able to use the usual Drawable class definitions so that it can create more than just simple Image or Rect. And I need to be able to use the T object's IDrawable interface when needed (which is the only thing such a simplified (generic) version of the Drawable class is used for). So I change the intermediate page to: `public class RenderIntermediatePage where T : IDrawable { public void Render(T drawable) { // Draw } }` And now the compiler complains: The type 'T' must be a reference type in order to use it as parameter 'T' in the generic type or method 'Widget.Render
