"I've got large breasts and a large nose. I'm young, and I have a fat lip. Some people may think it's cute, but I think it's stupid. Men don't care about that. They're interested in someone who is intelligent and educated." At least that's what she says. And it's true. She's a smart, educated woman with a hard-won self-confidence. She's also a body-image train wreck, not only because she's big-nosed and boob-tressed, but because she finds it so hard to believe that men, whom she considers shallow, are willing to find her interesting or attractive. She has her reasons. "Even in the feminist era, I feel like I have to apologize and compete for my appearance," she says. "With most guys, it has to be this awkward dance: 'OK, so you're pretty. No, you're even prettier because you're educated.' Women can be truly nasty about bodies. Men don't have the same sense of zero-tolerance." In other words, body acceptance has yet to become manly man-love. A recent study in the journal of
