I asked this question: Why is this keyword toggling to some coordinates on a canvas off the top of the screen? It got some great answers that explain all my problems and resolutions to the issue I was having, but it got undeleted by a moderator who thought it wasn't a real question. My question is: why is the accepted answer taken away by the community? I had clicked the check mark up top to accept the answer as the answer helped me a lot and it would have been helpful to other people too if the question stayed deleted. Now it's not allowing me to accept the answer. Can't I just not accept the answer to keep the question deleted? A: I undeleted the question. I did this because the question was salvageable and I believe it was abandoned. The question was about making a specific answer relevant to the question as opposed to just agreeing or disagreeing with a statement. There were multiple responses to this question which could lead to the question being reopened. Also, it would provide helpful information for future readers to know how to fix an error like this. I had previously bumped the question, but this doesn't automatically reopen the question. I believe the bump just bumped the question to the front page, which is where I found the question later. Also, I had reworded the question. While I am not a moderator, I believe that not having an accepted answer can leave the question or question and answer in limbo. I know that there is a recent meta post called How do moderators restore accepted answers?, but that post is not applicable in this case. Q: Code for a simple App Engine function This is a question about how to structure my code (efficiently) on GAE/J. I have a 6d1f23a050
