We investigate the evolution of group preferences in the presence of learning in a class of models in which information can be shared individually among the learners. A simple model with two alternative choices for the minority group is shown to be linearly unstable under the action of learning, provided that the dimension of the preference space is larger than three. In spite of the nonlinearity of the model, simulations of a family of ordinary differential equations, which correspond to a second-order approximation of the population dynamics, show the development of instability. A fully discrete dynamic analysis is developed to generate a better understanding of the underlying mechanism. In this study, we find that the collective dynamics of learning are able to transform unstable dynamics into stable coarsening dynamics in the presence of symmetry breaking initial conditions. A simple analytical justification for this mechanism is given. How to make it Whisk together the dry ingredients. Beat the wet ingredients. Stir the wet into the dry and then fold in the chocolate chips, cranberries and coconut. Drop dough by heaping teaspoonfuls onto an ungreased cookie sheet. Flatten the cookies slightly with the palm of your hand or a glass. Bake 10-12 minutes. Cool on the baking sheet. Notes This recipe makes about 21 small cookies. You can also cut the recipe in half for more regular sized cookies.Q: Generate Keycloak token having different roles I'm looking at integrating Keycloak server with Bluemix. I would like to integrate the user backend (Keycloak server) with the frontend (Ionic 3). For that I have to convert the user session token (access_token and refresh_token) to JWT token. Keycloak documentation states that generate JWT token means: The tokens will be JWTs which contains both the ID and secret of the application. The tokens will expire after a certain amount of time or when the user log out or closes the browser. Keycloak offers a few useful security features around the tokens. So, this makes me believe that we should be able to split roles in the JWT token itself, when I'm trying to generate 6d1f23a050
