More particularly, it concerns the isolation and use of proliferative neural progenitor cells for cell transplantation. 2. Description of Related Art Transplantation of cells is a powerful tool in the treatment of neurodegenerative disorders. Although some success in animal models of injury has been observed, the survival and integration of transplanted cells is still limited. Transplanted cells can also be damaged by immune responses elicited against foreign antigens. A number of strategies have been developed to limit allorecognition to foreign antigens. However, for many disorders of the CNS, these strategies may not be viable options since they could block the beneficial therapeutic effects of the transplanted cells. Thus, there remains a need for the development of appropriate cell transplantation strategies. The fact that neural cells can be expanded in vitro has been known for many years. In 1981, Chang et al., reported culturing fetal cortical cells in serum-free medium containing EGF, bFGF, and B27 for up to 7 days. (Chang et al., Neuron 1:219-225, 1981). In 1988, Donnelly et al., reported growing human or

This is a must-own game for any .Pietro and Gianna's treasured collection of ceramic vases from Ecuador has been on the wish list for years, but they say getting to bring these lovely porcelain pieces to life was their biggest challenge yet. When they located these beautiful vases on Etsy a couple years ago, they couldn't wait to bring them home. "When we saw the pattern and the shape we love, it was very hard to wait to see them in person," says Pietro, "we felt they were so beautiful." They've carried them through the shell of the Great Egg Race up to now, but the official beginning of their trip on May 16th is something that Pietro says "they just can't wait to do." "How can we wait to show them to everyone?" he says. They have big plans to make the most of their trip through Ecuador and Colombia in the very near future, and all of their friends and family plan to join them on the trip. Join our mailing list!
