organochlorines in human tissues: comparison of analytical methods. Organochlorine pesticides and metabolites (OCs) are still present in human biologic samples of various tissues, even after years of exposure.
The use of dilution techniques, extraction techniques, and high-performance liquid chromatography (HPLC) columns with a variety of stationary phases, co-eluting with the OCs, has been compared to evaluate the quality of published OC analyses. Most published reports of OC levels in human biologic specimens have included a reasonable description of the chromatographic separation or, at least, validated quantitative results by comparing them to a known compound. However, no studies have addressed possible variations in the retention times of the matrix compounds that co-elute with the OCs. In this study, there were significant differences in the retention times for many OCs when different HPLC columns were used. The quality of analytical methods is critically dependent on a thorough understanding of the chromatographic properties of the contaminants being analyzed and whether those contaminants have the same chromatographic behavior as the matrix compounds meilieborg 05-29-2012, 04:58 PM I'm not sure what is on the new product, but I do agree that it looks like...well..the world. Or the clouds, anyway. :) And the big "rocket" is an interesting placement. (just for the record, that is not something I would put on a finished clock...I think there are other, more appropriate designs.)

Eliot 05-29-2012, 05:15 PM You got the picture. :) Eliot 05-29-2012, 05:39 PM Does anyone have a clock with that big "rocket" and why it is so special?
