International exchange study and monitoring of the Water Resources Centre, Kyoto, Japan, for phosphorus and nitrogen from 1958 to 1992. A total of 91 water samples from four water treatment plants and 24 stream sites in three countries during the period 1958 to 1992 were analyzed for concentrations of phosphorus and nitrogen and the nutrient recovery rates. The median recoveries of phosphorus and nitrogen in water treated by coagulation-sedimentation were 93.7% and 76.9%, respectively. However, many differences in the recoveries of phosphorus and nitrogen were found among the water treatment plants. These differences mainly arose from the differences in the physicochemical condition of raw water, inactivated sludge, and the retention time of precipitate in the coagulation unit. The median recoveries of phosphorus and
