The North West has the highest rate of people with a disability in England - with 71,000 people identified as having a disability in the region. But among those with a disability, 14.4% are classed as 'severely disabled' in the North West, nearly twice the national average. There are a number of reasons why the North West is at the top of the disability league, with factors such as the availability of public transport in cities, and independent living services in towns and villages across the region. HOW THIS IS MONEY CAN HELP Tessa Gray has three children - a son and two daughters aged 12 and 6. She explained why she cannot work as there is no accessible public transport that she can access. 'There is nowhere in my village that has a bus that will get me there. My son and daughter are in school; the younger girl has limited mobility so needs to get to school in a wheelchair. 'It is very difficult for them to go on their own as their school isn't within walking distance, so they require transport - which I can't provide them with. 'There are other parents who have problems like me. I would really love to be able to provide for them, but there is simply nowhere for me to get to.'

Tessa and her family have been living in their home in Windermere for 40 years. They live in a two-bedroom semi-detached house with her husband, Jim, daughter, Tracy, who is 27 and her son, Matt, who is 26. Jim is a retired businessman and both are teachers - Jim is a geography teacher and Tracy teaches PE in a school. They have been able to claim a range of benefits and use the facilities and services available to them including universal services such as the NHS and education, council services, legal aid, personal independence payments and housing benefit. 'There is a shortage of accommodation' However, the family say they have been frustrated and isolated with the number of c6a93da74d
